Course description: This course provides an introduction to the law of corporate management and finance. It covers the basic law of business organization, including agency, partnerships, and corporations, with an emphasis on the governance of large publicly held corporations. The course covers the basic obligations of corporate directors and managers under state corporate law and the federal securities laws in the United States, including the substantive areas of fiduciary duties, insider trading, shareholder voting, and mergers and acquisitions. The rights and responsibilities of major players in corporate governance, including managers, shareholders, bondholders, and employees are considered, as well as the roles of investment bankers, corporate lawyers, and accountants. A comparative perspective includes a discussion of the law of corporate governance in other leading countries, though the focus in terms of details remains on U.S. law. Issues of social policy concerning large business corporations are also discussed.

Required texts:

Note: Students do not need to purchase either the 2014 supplement to the textbook or the statutory supplement.
Availability of texts: Books are available at the Penn Book Center. Also, for a less expensive electronic version of the text go to: http://store.westacademic.com/s.nl/it.A/id.5623/.f

Handouts: Any handouts provided in class are also considered required course materials.

Note on coverage for accountants and lawyers (or future accountants and lawyers): This course, in addition to being required in some states, covers a number of areas on the CPA exam. This course covers many of the topics that would also be covered in a basic corporate law course in law school, though with an emphasis on business rather than legal lessons for practice.

Office hours: to be announced and by appointment.

Quality feedback/informal dinners/lunches: A series of optional dinners and/or lunches will be held to get feedback from students about the course, as well as to encourage general informal interactions among students and the professor. No credit (or discredit) for class participation will be given for participation in informal dinners or lunches.

Class format and student participation: Classes will combine lecture, Socratic dialogue, and group discussion. Students will be expected to have read material assigned for class and to be prepared to discuss it.

Exams and grading: There will be one required exam covering materials formally assigned for the class primarily on U.S. law (but not including materials presented by students). In addition, there will be required student team presentations on selected topics in corporate governance, focused especially on covering international dimensions. Final grades for the course will be based on performance on the exam (one-third), team presentation (one-third), and class participation (one-third).

Exam: The scheduled in-class exam will be open-book and open-notes (only a student’s own materials of course). It will include fact-based scenarios (including an expectation of “issue spotting”) calling for assessments of legal and business actions to take. A policy question is also possible. The exam will require essay-style responses in blue books.

Group Presentation: A primary component of the course is a group presentation. Students should begin to consider a topic that they would like to investigate relatively early in the semester. Possible topics are indicated on the syllabus and in reading materials, but most of the presentations will be scheduled near the end of the semester. Departures from the syllabus-listed topics are possible and even encouraged, and topics must be cleared with the professor in advance. Groups are limited to two or three students (a partnership in which students divide work according to informal arrangement and share the same grade for the result). Grades for the projects will be based on the quality and coherence of the final presentation itself, as well as any supplementary written or other submissions provided indicating sources and research.
Class participation: Students are expected to come to class prepared to discuss the assigned material. A ranking for attendance and participation will be assessed for each class session with the final grade determined by an accumulation of credits by the end of the course. Regular and excellent class participation and attendance will therefore increase a student’s final grade. Poor attendance, unpreparedness, or failure to participate in class will reduce a student’s final grade.
