COURSE REQUIREMENTS

Race Law is a three-credit Course. Class attendance is mandatory. Students who miss more than two class sessions, excused or unexcused, will not be permitted submit a paper. Students are required to write a research paper in partial fulfillment of the course requirements. The paper must have a length of not less than 20 pages plus endnotes and must be typed and double-spaced. Students may use endnotes or footnotes, whichever they prefer. Those using footnotes should take this into consideration in satisfying suggested page-length guidelines for their papers.

Students may write on any topic of their choice as long as it is within the scope of the subject matter of the course. Students must discuss their research topics with and get approval for them from Professor Anderson. Individual topic discussion meetings may be arranged and a list of possible topics will be made available. Students are strongly encouraged to develop their own topic or a diversity issue. Topics selected from this list receive automatic approval without request. By the first month of class paper due dates will be established. The date is usually the Friday after the last class session by 3:00 p.m. Late papers will be accepted but will be reduced by one full letter-grade.

Generally, the assigned materials will be read by the entire class. Each student will take part in a case presentation group which will be part of their class participation grade.

COURSE DESCRIPTION

The course will examine the use of the law both to perpetuate and eradicate racial injustice in the United States from the inception and rise of slavery during the colonial period through the racial desegregation decision of the United States Supreme Court in Brown v. Board of Education in 1954 to the present. The goals of the course are to achieve an understanding of the role of law in its social context, especially with regard to the use of legal institutions and law in the creation and maintenance of systems of racial injustice; and, as a corollary, to examine the potential and limits of the use of law (especially litigation) as a tool for social change.

The course will begin with an examination of the analytical framework for the study of race and the law. Two subjects will be covered; racial prejudice and race classification.

The course will then focus on the role of law in the introduction and development of the slave system. The subsequent expansion and entrenchment of the institution of slavery in the new nation will be examined next through a case and statutory study of antebellum slavery law. Several cases from various northern courts will be studied as well. The major institutions focused upon will be the state courts and the state legislatures with regard to their role in the preclusion or allowance of traditional family relations, educational options, due process in the courts, and other "rights" for slaves and free blacks.

We will also explore the political debates and the handling of the slavery issue in the formulation of those documents central to the federal government, e.g., the Declaration of Independence, the Articles of Confederation, and the Constitution. In addition, we will look at the federal judiciary's treatment of slavery and the status of blacks.

The foci will not be limited merely to the rules of law adopted by the courts or the legislatures. A major issue for exploration will be the values and priorities of the individuals in power and a probing of how these values and principles affected their choice of options and the rules of law adopted. We will analyze the "prejudices which judges share" as suggested by Oliver Wendell Holmes when he wrote:

The life of the law has not been logic: it has been experience. The felt necessities of the time, the prevalent moral and political theories, intuitions of public policy, avowed or unconscious, even the prejudices which judges share with their fellow-men, have had a good deal more to do than the syllogism in determining the rules by which men should be governed. (Emphasis added)

During the latter-half of the course, we will follow the role of American law in the attempted eradication of racial segregation and discrimination against African Americans, Asian Americans, Latinos/as, and American Indians, concentrating predominantly on their treatment by the Congress and the Supreme Court. Thus, the inquiry will focus on the successes as well as the failures of American legal institutions during the nineteenth and twentieth centuries and includes examination of the passage and subsequent judicial interpretation of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments. Subjects covered include citizenship, sovereignty, transportation, housing, education, marriage, employment, business, voting, and the criminal justice system. By applying our understanding of the magnitude and nature of slavery gained from earlier study, students may better comprehend what the amendments were designed to eliminate and evaluate the nature and extent of the legal system's endeavors in this regard.

Next, the course will examine Supreme Court confirmation controversies involving race.

The course will also examine ongoing controversies involving race with specific focus on the administration of justice, critical race theory, hate speech, and the Official English Movement.

The course will conclude with an examination a discussion of “hot topics,” and a summary session on race and the future of America.

The rationale for this course was developed by the late Judge A. Leon Higginbotham, Jr., Chief Judge Emeritus of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, in his book, IN THE MATTER OF COLOR, and in the following articles: "Racism and the Early American Legal Process, 1619-1896," 407 ANNALS (May 1973): 1-17; Book Review of Race, Racism and American Law, by Derrick A.
