In this course we will study theory and evidence of how households make decisions surrounding real estate, how they interact with the financial sector, and how housing and mortgage choices influence urban markets and household balance sheets. We will examine real estate decisions from both supply and demand perspectives. There will be a special focus on the tools of modern empirical research, emphasizing the many challenges to causal identification and popular methodologies to overcome and address these challenges. The course will cover topics in mortgage choice, refinancing, renegotiation, default and foreclosure, discrimination, housing search, and market segmentation.

Assessment:

The assessment for the course will be based on the following

- Critical evaluation of a paper (30%), due 02/01
- Research proposal (50%), due 03/01 (when we will discuss in class)
- Class participation (20%)

Critical evaluation of a paper

This exercise consists of a critical evaluation of one paper, similar in style to a report a referee would write evaluating the paper for possible publication in a journal, as well as a “letter to the editor” summarizing the report. Students are allowed to choose a paper that has been published in the last 10 years or is not yet published, but please confirm the paper with me first. Read Berk, Harvey, and Hirshleifer, “Preparing a Referee Report: Guidelines and a Perspective,” (JEP 2017) beforehand. The report and editor letter should be submitted as a single PDF file by 02/01/22.

Research proposal

Establish an interesting and feasible research question, briefly survey the relevant literature, discuss possible existing data to analyze the question, provide a research design, and critically comment on it. Research proposals should be discussed with me beforehand. The length should be no more than 4 pages. The proposal should be submitted as a PDF file. We will discuss these proposals in class on 03/01/22.

Class participation

Some sessions we will cover two or three papers in particular detail. For each paper, the discussion will be led by one of us. The others are expected to have carefully read and reviewed the paper as well.
